G. schruve, G. schraube, a screw.] A cylinder of wood or metal having a spiral ridge or a thread winding round it in a uniform manner, so that successive turns are all exactly the same distance from each other, and a corresponding spiral groove is produced; it forms one of the six mechanical powers, and is simply a modification of the inclined plane, the energy being transmitted by means of a hollow cylinder (the female screw) of equal diameter with the solid one (male screw), having a spiral channel cut on its inner surface so as to correspond exactly to the spiral ridge raised upon the solid cylinder; also, a screw-propeller or a screw-steamer; one who makes a sharp bargain; a skid-add; a small quantity of tobacco twisted up in a pipe; &c.—Archimedeal screw, ARCHIMEDAS—Endless screw, ENDLESS—Right and left screw, a screw of which the threads upon the opposite ends run in different directions.—Screw propeller, an apparatus which being fitted to ships and driven by steam, propels them through the water, and which, in all its various forms, is a modification of the common screw.—A screw loose, something defective or wrong with a scheme or individual.—To put on the screw, to bring pressure to bear on a person, often for the purpose of getting money.—To put under the screw, to influence by strong pressure; to coerce.—v.t. To apply a screw to; to press, fasten, or make firm by a screw; to force as by a screw; to wrench; to twist; to rack; to oppress by exertions; to distort.—To screw down, to fasten or shut by means of screws.—To screw in, to force in by screwing or twisting round.—To screw out, to force out by turning; fig. to extort.—To screw up, to fix up by screws; fig. to raise extraordinarily.—Screw-bolt, a piece of iron, with a knob or flat head at one end and a screw at the other, used to join together pieces of timber, &c.—Screw-driver, n. An instrument resembling a blunt chisel for driving in or turning out screws.—Screw-driver, n. One who or that which screws.—Screw-jack, n. A portable machine for raising great weights by the agency of a screw.—Screw-key, n. An implement for turning screws or nuts by catching them in its jaws.—Screw-nail, n. A nail the lower part of which forms a screw, and which has a notch across its head.—Screw-pipe, n. The common name for a screw-propeller.

Archimedeal screw, ARCHIMEDAS—Endless screw, ENDLESS—Right and left screw, a screw of which the threads upon the opposite ends run in different directions.—Screw propeller, an apparatus which being fitted to ships and driven by steam, propels them through the water, and which, in all its various forms, is a modification of the common screw.—A screw loose, something defective or wrong with a scheme or individual.—To put on the screw, to bring pressure to bear on a person, often for the purpose of getting money.—To put under the screw, to influence by strong pressure; to coerce.—v.t. To apply a screw to; to press, fasten, or make firm by a screw; to force as by a screw; to wrench; to twist; to rack; to oppress by exertions; to distort.—To screw down, to fasten or shut by means of screws.—To screw in, to force in by screwing or twisting round.—To screw out, to force out by turning; fig. to extort.—To screw up, to fix up by screws; fig. to raise extraordinarily.—Screw-bolt, a piece of iron, with a knob or flat head at one end and a screw at the other, used to join together pieces of timber, &c.—Screw-driver, n. An instrument resembling a blunt chisel for driving in or turning out screws.—Screw-driver, n. One who or that which screws.—Screw-jack, n. A portable machine for raising great weights by the agency of a screw.—Screw-key, n. An implement for turning screws or nuts by catching them in its jaws.—Screw-nail, n. A nail the lower part of which forms a screw, and which has a notch across its head.—Screw-pipe, n. The common name for a screw-propeller.—Archimedeal screw, ARCHIMEDAS—Endless screw, ENDLESS—Right and left screw, a screw of which the threads upon the opposite ends run in different directions.—Screw propeller, an apparatus which being fitted to ships and driven by steam, propels them through the water, and which, in all its various forms, is a modification of the common screw.—A screw loose, something defective or wrong with a scheme or individual.—To put on the screw, to bring pressure to bear on a person, often for the purpose of getting money.—To put under the screw, to influence by strong pressure; to coerce.—v.t. To apply a screw to; to press, fasten, or make firm by a screw; to force as by a screw; to wrench; to twist; to rack; to oppress by exertions; to distort.—To screw down, to fasten or shut by means of screws.—To screw in, to force in by screwing or twisting round.—To screw out, to force out by turning; fig. to extort.—To screw up, to fix up by screws; fig. to raise extraordinarily.—Screw-bolt, a piece of iron, with a knob or flat head at one end and a screw at the other, used to join together pieces of timber, &c.—Screw-driver, n. An instrument resembling a blunt chisel for driving in or turning out screws.—Screw-driver, n. One who or that which screws.—Screw-jack, n. A portable machine for raising great weights by the agency of a screw.—Screw-key, n. An implement for turning screws or nuts by catching them in its jaws.—Screw-nail, n. A nail the lower part of which forms a screw, and which has a notch across its head.—Screw-pipe, n. The common name for a screw-propeller.—Archimedeal screw, ARCHIMEDAS—Endless screw, ENDLESS—Right and left screw, a screw of which the threads upon the opposite ends run in different directions.—Screw propeller, an apparatus which being fitted to ships and driven by steam, propels them through the water, and which, in all its various forms, is a modification of the common screw.—A screw loose, something defective or wrong with a scheme or individual.—To put on the screw, to bring pressure to bear on a person, often for the purpose of getting money.—To put under the screw, to influence by strong pressure; un- (Goth. un-, G. un-, D. un-, L. in-, all signifying not; and in this sense it is used chiefly before adjectives, past participles passive, and present participles used adjectively, being also prefixed to some nouns, as in untruth, undress, unrest, unwisdom, &c. Before some words of Latin origin it may be used alternatively with in- or non-; thus, unalterable, unalterably; unelastic, unelasticity, and non-elastic. A expressing reversal it represents A. Sax. un-, und-, ge-, an- in answer (feel and Goth. and-, G. and-, L. ante, before), and is generally prefixed to active transitive verbs, as undo, unlearn, unlock, unmake, &c. As adjectives and participles with the prefix un-, simply in the sense of not, are almost unlimited in number, and their meaning generally quite obvious, many of them are omitted from this work. When such words, however, have a special signification or usage of their own, and are not simply to be explained as equivalent to 'not' and their latter element, they are here given (as, for instance, unaccountable, unary, unconscionable, unparalleled, &c.). Verbs and nouns with the other un- as a prefix are also carefully defined.

Rudge, Barnaby. The hero of a novel by Dickens, a half-witted young man, always accompanied by a tame raven called 'Grip'. He takes an innocent part in the Gordon 'No Popery' riots, and is condemned to death, but pardoned. His mother's life was overshadowed by the knowledge that her husband and Barnaby's father was a murderer, skulking about the country in danger of his life.

Sabrina. A fabulous princess of ancient Britain, said to have become the nymph of the river Severn.

Sampson, Abel. See Dominie Sampson.

Sandford and Merton. A popular didactic tale for boys, written by Thomas Day in the eighteenth century, and recording the doings of Harry Sandford and Tommy Merton, and their tutor Mr. Harlow.

Sargardo, Dr. A doctor in Le Sage's novel Gil Blas, who prescribes copious bleeding, and the drinking of hot water for every sort of ailment.

Santa Claus. A personage of popular mythology in the United States, represented as bringing presents to the young on Christmas-eve. The name is equivalent to St. Nicholas, being based on the Dutch form sanct Nicolaas.

Sawyer, Bob. A roystering young doctor in Dickens's Pickwick, close friend of Ben Allen, another medical student.

Shahrazade or Shehrazad, sha-ra-zad, sha-ra-zad. The bride of the Sultan Shahrash, and the narrator of the stories that form the Arabian Nights.

Schlemiel, Peter, schli-miel. The hero of a short German story by Chamisso, which tells how he sold his shadow to a mysterious man in gray, and the events which followed.

Scribblerus, Martinus. A fictitious character, a man of learning but no taste, the subject of humorous memoirs written by Dr. John Arbuthnot in connection with Pope.

Scrooge, skroij. In Dickens's Christmas Carol, a grasping, covetous old hunk of a London merchant, who is converted to an entirely different disposition by a series of visions or dream pictures he sees at Christmas.

Scylla, sly-a. In ancient geography a rock, in the Strait of Messina which, with the adjacent whirlpool Charybdis (skari-yid-s), was proverbially a source of danger to mariners, sin in trying to avoid the one they were liable to encounter the other. Scylla was represented as a hideous monster.

Sedley, Amelia. One of the two chief female characters in Thackeray's Vanity Fair, amiable and affectionate, but not intellectually, and thus very different from Becky Sharp. She marries George Osborne, and cherishes his memory till she finds how unworthy he was, and then marries Colonel Dobbin. Her father, at one time wealthy, became a poor, broken-down creature, trying to sell his wife and daughter. Her brother Jos (Joseph), an Indian civilian, was a fat and cowardly dandy, latterly victimized by Becky Sharp.

Semela, sem-i-la. In ancient myth, the mother of Bacchus by Jupiter.

Semiramis. A legendary queen of Assyria, wife and successor to Ninus, and mother of Ninus.

Serapis. A deity worshipped in Egypt, chiefly by Greek and Roman residents.

Sete'sha. A god of the Patagonians mentioned in Shakespeare's Tempest. Seven against Thebes. See Epigoni.

Seven Champions of Christendom. St. George of England, St. Andrew of Scotland, St. Patrick of Ireland, St. David of Wales, St. Denis of France, St. James of Spain, St. Anthony of Italy.

Seven Sleepers. The subject of a legend which tells how seven Christian youths of Ephesus having taken refuge from persecution in a cave, were there walled up, but were miraculously made to sleep for two or three hundred years.

Shabbaz. See Barnaby Rudge.

Shank's Mustard. A character in Scott's Monastery whose language is marked by the affectation called euphuism.

Shallow, Justice. A foolish justice in Shakespeare's Merry Wives, and Henry IV. (second part).

Shandon, Captain. A literary man in Thackeray's Pendennis, with excellent abilities but easy and self-indulgent, spending much of his time in a debtors' prison.

Shandy, Tristram. The titular hero of Sterne's Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy, in which, however, his father and uncle, 'Uncle Toby', take the chief place.

The former (Tristram Shandy), a retired merchant, is a man of much reasoning, but a strange embodiment of whims and fantastic notions. Uncle Toby, who has been an officer in the army in Flanders, is simple, and his allusions are homely, with the mimic sieges that he carries out in his garden, and the attentions of Widow Wadman to hook him is one of the most amusing and most genuinely humorous characters in literature.

Sharp, Becky. One of the two chief female characters in Thackeray's Vanity Fair—clever, good-looking, heartless, ambitious, and utterly unscrupulous. She marries Rawdon Crawley, is justly discarded by him for her intrigue with Lord Steyne, turns adventures, cheats Jos Sedley out of his money, and then becomes respectable. See Sedley, Osborne.

Shor. See Sedley.

Slylock. The famous Jew in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, who lends money to Antonio, 'the merchant', stipulating that if it is not paid at a certain date he may take a pound of his debtor's flesh instead.

Siegfried, zif-ri-t. A hero of Teutonic legend, who is celebrated in the German epic the Nibelungenlied. Sigurd is another form of the name.

Sigmund, sig-i-mund-a. In a story by Doccaccio the daughter of a prince of Salerno who poison herself when her father sends to her the heart of her lover, a page of his named Chigiardo.

Sikes, Bill. A fictitious housebreaker in Dickens's Oliver Twist, who murders the girl Nancy that lives with him, and gets hanged by a rope in trying to escape.

Silence. A country justice, friend of Justice Shallow, in Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Silemar. A character in the company of Bacchus, represented as a jovial, drunken, sensual, old man.

Sindbad the Sailor. A merchant and mariner in the Arabian Nights who makes several wonderful voyages.

Sisyphus. See Sisyphus in fact.

Skimpole, Harold. In Dickens's Black House, an utterly selfish character who poses as a man of artistic tastes and a child in money matters, and takes advantage of his friends' good nature.

Slawkenbergie. An imaginary author quoted in Sterne's Tristram Shandy, and represented as having a huge nose.

Slender. A foolish country lord in love with 'Sweet Anne Page' in Shakespeare's Merry Wives.

Shick, Sam. An imaginary Yankee clock-maker and pedlar, a shrewd and amusing character who figures in several humorous narratives by Judge C. Halliburton of Nova Scotia.

Slop, Dr. A narrow-minded and irritable, medical man in Dickens's Tristram Shandy.

Sly, Christopher. A tinker in the 'Introduction' to Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, who is taken when dead drunk, dressed up, and made to fancy himself a king.

Smelfungus. A nickname given by Sterne to Smollett, who wrote a peevish account of his journey through France and Italy.

Smike. An ill-used boy, in Dickens's Nicholas Nickleby, befriended by Nicholas, and discovered to be the son of his uncle Ralph.

Sneak, Jerry. A henpecked husband in Foote's farce The Mayor of Garratt.

Snodgrass, Augustus. A poetical young man, one of the companions of Mr. Pickwick.

Sozia, so-zia-n. A slave of Amphitryon in Plautus's comedy of this name, puzzled by the go-mercery assuming his form.

Spenslow and Jorkins. In Dickens's David Copperfield, a firm of procuress to whom David was introduced as a partner.

Spenslow was a man of business, but little share in the business, but was represented by Spenslow as very strict and stern, and as setting his face against any lenient or indulgent course that he himself would otherwise incline to adopt.

Sporus. A name under which Pope satirizes Lord Hervey.

Square. See The Schoolmaster.

Squeers. In Dickens's Nicholas Nickleby the ignorant and brutal schoolmaster of Dotheboys Hall.

Steeforth. A young man of wealth who leads 'little Em'ly' astray, in Dickens's David Copperfield, and is drowned in a shipwreck at Yarmouth, where Ham Peggotty was also drowned trying to rescue him.

Stella. A poetical name given by Swift to Esther Johnson, a young lady with whom he was long on intimate terms.

Stephano. A drunken butler in Shakespeare's Tempest.

Steyne, Margaria of. A great English nobleman, who figures in Thackeray's Vanity Fair, and also appears in Pendennis—proud, sarcastic, irreligious, sensual, despising his followers yet accepting their notions, and in pursuit of pleasure, yet maintaining a reputable position in society and the world at large. His intrigues with Becky Sharp, caused her husband to discard her.

Stiggins. A thoroughly dissident preacher, in Dickens's Pickwick, given to the consumption of strong waters and dined in the house-rough by Old Weller.

Strap. The faithful friend and attendant of Roderick Random (see Random), who shows him but little gratitude for many services rendered.

Vanity Fair. A famous fair in the Pilgrim's Progress, held in the town of Vanity, where Christian and Faithful are maltreated, and the latter condemned to be burned. Vanity Fair is the name of one of the chief of Thackeray's novels. See Crawley, Dobbin, Osborne, Sedley, Sharp, Sygie.

Varden, Gabriel. An honest master locksmith in Dickens's Barnaby Rudge, with a charming daughter named Dolly, who gets married to young Joe Willet. Mrs. Varden was a religious shrew, a persecuted martyr in her ways, and in those of her sympathetic servant Mrs. Gudge.

Vathek. The hero of Beckford's powerful romance of same name, an eastern monarch guilty of the greatest crimes, in league with demons, and latterly entombed in the abyss of Eblis or hell.

Veal, Mrs. An imaginary woman of whose appearance after death to Mrs. Bargevine at Canterbury, Defoe has given a most circumstantial account, a fiction intended, it is said, to help the sale of an edition of Drelincourt on Death.

Veiled Prophet of Khorassan. One of the metrical tales forming Moore's Lalla Rookh, founded upon the story of a real personage. The prophet claims to have supernatural power, and pretends to wear a veil to hide the excessive brightness of his countenance, but really to conceal his deformed features.

Verge, Vergez. See Dogberry.

Vesipopt, Lord. A young nobleman in Dickens's Nicholas Nickleby, the admirer and pupil of Sir Mulberry Hawk.

Vemon, Diana. The heroine of Scott's Rob Roy, perhaps the most charming of all his female characters—beautiful, well-read, and educated, fond of field sports, spirited, and self-reliant. We meet with her at Ostlandstone Hall and in the Highlands, and are told that she became the wife of Frank Osbaldistone. Her father was a gentleman who intrigued in favour of the exiled Stuarts.

Vermansus. A Roman god of the crops and of wars.

Vicar of Bray. An English vicar who have lived in the reign of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, and to have been twice a Catholic and twice a Protestant.

Vicar of Wakefield. See Princess.

Viola. The chief heroine of Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, sister of Sebastian, in love with the Duke Orsino, between whom and the lady Olivia she acts as intermediary dressed as a page. The Duke ultimately marries her.

Virginia. A beautiful Roman girl whom the lustful tribune Appius Claudius wished to get into his power on plea of her being a slave, but who was stabled by her own father to preserve her from such a fate. See also Paul and Virginia.

Vivien or Vivian. A woman connected with the story of King Arthur, whose charms overcome the chieftain Merlin, so that she induced him to a hollow oak for all time concur.

Vortigern. A mythical or semi-mythical British king said to have married Rowena, daughter of Hengist.

Vulcan, Vulcanus. The Roman deity who presided over fire and the working of metals, identified with the similar Greek deity Hephestus. He made thunderbolts for Jupiter, arms for gods and heroes, and many wonderful contrivances; and had forges in Olympus as well as under Etna, where the Cyclops were his workmen. He is always represented as lame.

Woman, Widow. A buxom lady in Sterne's Tristram Shandy, whose wiles nearly captivate Uncle Toby.

Wage and Wenham. Two scyphoid and doers of dirty work for the Marquis of Steyne in Thackeray's Vanity Fair and Pendennis.

Wamba. The hare-brained jester of Cedric the Saxon in Scott's Ivanhoe.

Wandering Jew. A Jew who, according to a legend that arose in the middle ages, was condemned for harsh treatment of Christ to wander over the world till his second coming.

Warrington, George. In Thackeray's Pendennis, a young man of good family, a barrister and writer for the press, whose prospects have been blasted by an unfortunate early marriage—a great friend of Pendennis. Members of the same family, but of an earlier generation, appear in Thackeray's novel The Virginians.

Waywiler. The first of Scott's great series of novels, to which it gives name. The hero is Edward Waverley, a young English nobleman, and the scene is chiefly in Scotland during the rebellion of 1746. The characters include the Baron Bradwardine and his daughter Rosa, Fergus and Flora Mac-Ivor, Prince Charles Edward himself, and David Gellatley.

Wayland, the Smith. A supernatural smith of English and Scandinavian mythology. A farrier called Wayland Smith is introduced by Scott into his novel of Wieland.

Wetenschlo, vis'necht-vn. That is 'know-not-where,' the place in which was situated the university of Professor Tenfelsdröckh in Carlyle's Sartor Resartus.

Weller, Sam. The valet or personal attendant of Mr. Pickwick, in Dickens's Pickwick Papers, a genuine Londoner, uneducated, ready-witted, full of humour, and devoted to his master's interests. His father, Tony Weller, is a fat old coachman, ignorant of almost everything except what belongs to his business. Having married a widow who kept the Marquis of Gumbly High, he held strong opinions about widows and their artfulness.

Werther, varter. A young German student, the sickly sentimental hero of Goethe's novel, who puts an end to himself, because he vainly covets his neighbour's wife. Thackeray compresses the story into a few humorous verses more pithy than complimentary to him.

Western, Squire. A jolly, ignorant, coarse, hot-tempered, and intensely prejudiced English squire in Fielding's Tom Jones. His charming daughter Sophia is in love with and marries Tom Jones.

Whisker-and-Don. The lover of Tiberius in Puff's ridiculous tragedy that is introduced into Sheridan's comedy The Critic.

Whittington, Dick. The hero of a story known to every one, and which seems to have been at least founded on fact. Wickfield, Agnes. A beautiful, amiable, and sensible young lady in Dickens's David Copperfield, daughter of Mr. Wickfield, a lawyer; became David Copperfield's second wife. Uriah Heep was clerk to her father, and nearly brought ruin upon him.

Wild, Jonathan. A notorious English robber, who is the hero of Fielding's satirical novel The Adventures of Jonathan Wild the Great.

Wilde, Madge. A young woman in Scott's novel The Heart of Midlothian, whose brain has been turned by seduction and the murder of her infant, and who still retains the giddiness and loss of sanity natural to her character.

Wild Huntsman. A spectral huntsman of German legend, who goes driving along at night with a noisy train of men and dogs, the subject of a ballad by Bürger, translated by Sir Walter Scott.

Wilkins, Peter. The hero of a tale by a Robert Paltock (written about 1750), a sort of Crusoe who meets with a winged race of people in a kind of twilight. See Gargery.

Willet, John. The ignorant, pig-headed landlord of the Maypole in Dickens's Barnaby Rudge, who tyrannizes over his son Joe in such a way as to make him run away and enlist. Joe afterwards marries Dolly Varden and becomes landlord himself.

Wimble, Will. An amusing character in the Spectator, a member of the club to which Sir Roger de Coverley and others belong.

Winkle, Mr. Nathaniel. One of the companions of the immortal Pickwick, represented as the would-be sportsman of the party, but knowing as little of shooting as he does of skating. He marries Abella Allen.

Winkle, Rip Van. An American Dutchman, hero of a story by Washington Irving, a good-humoured, indolent sort of fellow, who encounters a strange company playing at nine-pins in the Kantskill Mountains, and having tasted their liquor falls asleep and does not awake for twenty years.

Woden. Same as Odin.

Wooden Horse. A huge figure of a horse made of wood, and containing armed Greeks, which the Trojans were induced by the Greeks to admit into Troy, thus leading to the capture of the city.

Ya-hoo. See in Dict.

Yama. An Indian deity, lord of hell, fierce and terrible.

Yellowplush, Mr. A fictitious London footman who figures as the author of certain poems and sketches by Thackeray, written as an illustration, footman might write.

Yggdrasil. The tree of the universe, a huge ash which holds an important place in Scandinavian mythology and cosmogony.

Yorkick. Jester to the king of Denmark in Shakespeare's Hamlet. Sterne was introduced a personage of this name into his Tristram Shandy—simple, light-hearted, and humorous—intended as a portrait of himself.

Yzoid. See Isold.

Yvetot, Et-ti. A small town of northern France, not far from Rouen, the site or territory of which formerly gave the title of king to its lord, possessor. An imaginary king of Yvetot has been celebrated in humorous verse by the French poet Béranger.

Zanoni. The hero of a novel by Bulwer Lytton, a man who can communicate with spirits, has the secret of prolonging life, of producing gold and gems, &c.

Zephon. A cherub in Milton's Paradise Lost, sent with Ithuriel to seek for Satan in Eden.

Zephyrus, Zee-er. In classical mythol. a personification of the west wind.

Zeu. See in Dict.

Zuleika, zuleika. An oriental female name said by the Mohammedans to have been that of Potiphar's wife. The heroine of Byron's Bride of Abydos is so named.

Fate, fat, fat, fall; me, met, her; pine, pin; note, not, move; tube, tub, hull;

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF GREEK, LATIN, SCRIPTURAL, AND OTHER ANCIENT NAMES.

RULES AND DIRECTIONS FOR PRONUNCIATION.

The pronunciation indicated in the following list is that usually heard from educated speakers of English, who as a rule do not attempt to pronounce Greek or Latin or Scriptural names in the way in which they were pronounced by the ancients themselves — if that could be with certainty determined — but rather seek to assimilate the pronunciation to that of their own language. There is therefore no great difficulty in the pronunciation of such words, and by attention to the following rules and directions any name in the list can be sounded correctly.

Special knowledge required for the right pronunciation of these words is—

1. The seat of accent; and
2. The sound to be given to the letters as they stand in the word.

The syllable of the word which is to receive the accent is denoted by the usual mark, acute accent, placed immediately after it, as the first syllable of the word Cato, the second of the word Camby'ses, and the third of the word San-cho-ba-thon. The seat of the accent varies considerably in words of more than two syllables, though it is never on the last syllable, in dissyllable it is always on the first. The pronunciation of the latter, therefore, as also of monosyllabic words, after the following remarks are studied, will present no difficulty, and consequently few of them are given in the list below. The division into separate syllables is denoted by the mark - as well as by the accentuation mark. Two vowels coming together in a word, but having one or other of these marks between them, must therefore always be pronounced as belonging to different syllables.

The sounds to be given to the several letters will be considered under two general heads, viz.: 1. The vowel letters; and 2. The consonant letters. It must always be borne in mind that silent letters, so common in English (e final for instance), are the exception in the words here treated of.

I.—THE VOWEL LETTERS.

The vowels heard in the words fat, me, pine, note, and tube, are called long vowels; while those heard in the words fat, not, pin, net, and us, are called short vowels.

1. When any of the vowel letters a, e, i, o, and u, constitute an accented syllable, and also when they end one, they are pronounced as long vowels; thus, in the first syllable of the words Cato, Polop, Dido, Solon, and Juria, they are pronounced as in the respective key-words fat, me, pine, note, and tube.

2. When the vowel letters are followed by an or more consonants in a syllable, they are pronounced as short vowels; thus, in the first syllable of the words Car'ca, He'cuba, Chi'na, Cor'dula, and Pabi'us, they are pronounced as in the respective key-words fat, not, pin, net, and us.

3. When the letter a constitutes an unaccented syllable, as in Aby'dos, and when it ends one, as in Juba, it is pronounced as a in fat.

4. The so-called diphthongs ae, or oe, are always pronounced as the e of me, and are therefore simple vowel sounds, as in Cae'sar, Pae'tum, Ae'olus, Bae'tia.

5. The digraph ai in a syllable is pronounced like ai in wait. It occurs only in Scriptural names. The ai of Greek words was pronounced like common English affirmative ay, or much the same as i in pine; but by the common spelling it is Latinized into e. An a and i coming together, but belonging to different syllables, will of course have either the accent or the mark between them.

6. When r follows a in the same syllable, and is itself followed by a consonant, as in Ar'go, Car'cho'go, the a is pronounced as in fat. In such a word as Ar'a'dus it is sounded as i in fat.

7. The digraph au, as in Clau'di-us, Au'di't-us, is pronounced as a in fat. An a and u coming together, however, may belong to different syllables, as in En'e'mus.

8. When e constitutes an unaccented syllable, as in the first of the word E'te'o-cles, and when it ends one, as in E'vad'ne, it is pronounced as e of me. And when e is followed by s as the final letter of a word, as in Her'mes, Ar-i'stoph'a-nes, it is always pronounced as e of me.

9. When e is followed by r in the same syllable, as in Mer'cu'ri-us, Mer'cu'ri-us, the e is pronounced as e of her. The letters i, u, and y, before r, have the same sound, as in Vir'gil, Bur'sa, Cy'rus. When er is followed by a vowel, however, e is sounded as in met, thus Er'a-to, Mer'o-o.

10. The digraph ei, as in Pl'e'i'ades, is pronounced as i of pine. An e and i coming together, however, may belong to different syllables. Compare Rules 5 and 7.

11. The diphthong or digraph eu, as in Leu'cip'pus, Elen'us, Ti'mothe'us, is pronounced as u of tube. It occurs chiefly in Greek names. In other cases the e and u belong to separate syllables. Compare Rules 10 and 7.

12. When i constitutes the last and last syllables of words, whether accented or not, as in Ib'e'ria, Pa'bi'i, it is pronounced as i of pine. And i as the terminal vowel of a syllable at the end of words is also pronounced as in Im'ri-a, cep'h'a-li.

13. But i at the end of any other unaccented syllable than the last, as in Ind'i-a, Pa'bi'i, is pronounced as i of pin.

14. In many cases i assumes the value of y consonant in English; thus Aquila is pronounced as if Aqui'le'ya, Caius as if Cai'us. This is especially common in the terminations of words.

15. o at the end of an unaccented syllable, as also when constituting an unaccented syllable by itself, is generally pronounced long or of medium length. Followed by r in the same syllable, as in Gor'gus, it is not usually pronounced long, but as o of not. The o in such a position is, however, by some speakers pronounced rather long than short, this being pretty much a matter of taste.

16. At the end of an unaccented syllable, or forming an unaccented syllable (as in Eu'di-i, A-b'hi'hu), u is pronounced much the same as when accented, but shorter. Following i it is pronounced as u.

17. The letter y is pronounced as i would be in corresponding positions, thus the y in Ty'a-na is as i of pine; and the y in Ty'n-da-rus as i of pin.

II.—THE CONSONANT LETTERS.

The consonant letters, b, d, f, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, v, y, and z, have each but one sound, and as that is the English sound, they present no difficulty. The letters c, g, e, i, and x, have each more than one sound, and hence require rules to pronounce them aright.

1. C and g are hard, or sounded as in cat and gun respectively, when immediately followed by the vowel letters a, o, and u, as in Cae'sa, Cor'nelia, Cur'tius, He'e'te, He'e'ba, Gall'us, Gor'di-us, Ag'ustus, Me'e'tra. c and g are also hard immediately before other consonant letters, as in Clau'di'us, Ec'c'e'sia'n, Hec'tor, Glau'cus.

2. C and g are soft when immediately followed by the vowel letters e, i, and y, and the so-called diphthongs ae, or oe, either in the same or in the following syllable, as in Cor'te'us, Chi'na, Cy're'ne, Cle'o'ra, Gel'i'us, Ge'o'cy'as, Phoe'bi-us, Cae'sar, Cae'cil'us. In words such as Pae'cia, Sicyon, Phoe'cia, Ae'olus, Glaucia, Cappa'docia, the c or g, having the accent immediately before it, is often pronounced as sh; some authorities, however, retain the s sound in such words.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

HINTS ON THE PRONUNCIATION OF FOREIGN NAMES.

FOREIGN geographical names are spelled in English books either in the same manner as they are spelled in the language of the country to which they belong (when that language uses the Roman alphabet), or phonetically in accordance with the prevailing sounds of the letters of the English alphabet.

In foreign languages there are many sounds or shades of sound not heard in English; but for ordinary purposes it is not necessary to try to reproduce all these, and in the key below it will be seen that only six signs are used to represent un-English sounds. These must be learned by the ear from those who are able to render them accurately, but it may be mentioned that the French sound heard long in ade and short in but is like the sound of u in the Scotch word about; that that heard long in jeu and short in men has some resemblance to the sound of e in her; that the sound represented by n (as in the French on) is produced by emitting voice through the mouth and nose at the same time, and is accordingly not a pure nasal (like the English ng in sing) but a semi-nasal, and that the ch in the German nacht is a strongly aspirated guttural like ch in the Scotch word loch. [Strictly speaking ch has this sound after the vowels a, o, u; only after the other vowels and after consonants it is produced between the point of the tongue and the fore-part of the palate.] As the key shows, y is always used with its consonantal sound as in yes. It will be understood that in spelling names to indicate pronunciation, the consonants b, d, f, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, r, t, v, w, and z; and the diagraphs ng, nk, and sh always have their usual English sounds; and e always has the hissing sound as in sea.

VOWELS AND VOWEL DIAPHRAS.

a is usually sounded ā (see bottom of page), but sometimes long, sometimes short. In Hungarian it is often like o in not. ā in Swedish is sounded ō.

ā or ao is usually sounded like ā or o, as Flemish (and old Dutch) like ā.

aa in Danish is sounded ā, in Dutch as i.

ai and y usually have each of the vowels sounded, the sound of a being rapidly followed by that of i. In German they are sounded like i in pine, in French mostly like ā.

ao in Portuguese is sounded ā or o.

ay is usually pronounced either with the sounds of the vowels separately, or as a diaphragh like ou. In French it is pronounced like o in note.

e is usually sounded like ā or o in me. Very often it has an obscure sound as in the English golden. In French it is often mute.

eu in French has the sound of o in note. ei and ey, like ai and ay, usually have each of the vowels sounded separately, o being rapidly followed by that of i. In Dutch and German they have the sound of i. In French they are pronounced like ā or e.

ou is sounded in Dutch as in French, in German like oi, in other languages with the sounds of the vowels separately.

i is usually sounded like ā, or, when short, much like i.

ie in Dutch, German, and French is sounded like e except where the letters belong to two syllables.

ij in Dutch has a sound like that of i in pine.

o is usually sounded like ō or o, in Danish and Norwegian sometimes like ū.

o or oe is sounded in German, Danish, and Swedish like eu in French.

oi in Danish has a sound similar to ō.

oi is usually pronounced with the sound of the separate vowels; in French it is like wa in wa.

ou in French has the sound of ū, in Dutch and Norwegian that of ou.

u is usually sounded as ō or ū; in French, as already mentioned, the sound is peculiar, and in Dutch is much the same.

ū or ue in German is sounded like ū or ū.

ū in Welsh is sounded like e.

ui in Dutch is pronounced like oi in oil.

y is usually sounded like e; in Danish, Swedish, and Polish like the French u. In old Dutch it is used where the digraph ij is used in modern orthography. In Welsh, without an accent mark, it has the sound of u, except at the end of a word, when it sounds like i.

y in Welsh has the sound of e in me (like the Welsh ū).

CONSONANTS AND CONSONANTAL DIAPHRAS.

Most of the consonants have the same sound in the languages of the European continent using the Roman alphabet as they have in English, but the following peculiarities are to be noted:—
b at the end of a word is often sounded in German like p. In Spanish it is pronounced with very feeble contact of the lips so as to be softened almost to a v-sound.

c before another consonant and before the vowels a, o, ō is usually sounded like k. Before the vowels e and i in French, Danish, Swedish, and Portuguese it is sounded like s; in Italian like ch in chain, in Spanish like th in thin, in German like t. In Italian where another vowel follows c (as well as gi or cei) the i is not sounded, having merely the effect of softening the c. In Spanish America c is usually pronounced as s in those cases in which in Spain it is pronounced th. In Bohemian and Polish it is always sounded like t, and in Celtic languages like k.

q is used in French and Portuguese to indicate the s-sound of c before the vowels a, o, and u.

ch in Dutch, Polish, and Bohemian, as well as in German, has the sound of ch; in Italian it has the sound of k; in French (except in some words derived from the Greek, in which it is sounded like k) that of sh.

cs in Hungarian has the sound of ch in chain.

cz in Polish has the sound of ch in chain, in Hungarian that of ts.

d at the end of a word in German and Dutch is often sounded like t. In Spanish and Danish between two vowels nd after a vowel at the end of a word, it is softened to a sound resembling nn (—th in thine). At the beginning of a word and when the Spanish d is preceded by another consonant, a sound like that of the English d is produced. When d comes after i, n, r in Danish it is not sounded.

dd in Welsh has the sound of nn.

g before a consonant and before the vowels a, o, and u mostly has the sound of g in go; and it has the same sound before other vowels also in German and Danish, and in all situations in Polish and Welsh. After a vowel it frequently has in German and Danish a guttural sound like ch of Scotch each. In Dutch the sound is always like this, except in the combinations gh and ug, the former of which is pronounced like g in go, the latter like ng in sing. In French, Portuguese, Spanish, and Swedish the sound of the j of the same languages in all situations in which it has not the sound of g in go, and in Italian it is then sounded like our j. (See above under c.)

gh in Italian and Dutch has the sound of g in go.

gl in Italian has the sound of ly (y being sounded as in yes; gli—lye).

gn in French and Italian has the sound of ny (Bolognese—bo-lon'ya).

Fate, far, fat, fall; me, met, her, golden; pine, pin; note, not, move, tube, tub, bull; sil, pound; ch, chain; g, go; j, job; y, yes; vi, then; th, thin; gh, azure. French, rue, hut; hœ, neut; z, on. Scotch and German, ch, lock, neck.

gn in French always, and in Portuguese and Spanish before o and i, has the sound of g in go.

gy in Hungarian has the sound of dy or dzh.

h in French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese is silent or scarcely audible. In Spanish it is heard as a slight aspiration before the combination ue. In Danish h is not sounded before j and v.

j in most languages has the sound of y; in French and Portuguese that of zh; in Spanish that of ch. In Danish the sound of the Danish j (that is, the sound of the consonant j) is always interpolated after the consonants k and g before the vowels æ, ø, ø, y, and i.

k in Norwegian before e, i, j, y, and the modifications of a and o, is sounded like ty.

l in Portuguese has the sound of ly (lly, gl).

ll in French in formal speech has the sound of ly, but colloquially is generally sounded like the consonant y without any l-sound. In Spain it always has the former sound (Sevilla=sevelyá, but in Mexico the latter is often substituted). In Welsh it has a peculiar sound, which is approximately rendered when one attempts to pronounce tl at the beginning of a syllable.

m in French and Portuguese often has the sound of n.

n in French has the peculiar pronunciation already mentioned. ñ in Spanish nh in Portuguese } have the sound of French and Italian gn.

qu in French always, and in Portuguese and Spanish before e and i, is sounded like x.

r is almost always ifor strongly trilled than in English.

rz in Bohemian } are both sounded like rz.

s in German is usually pronounced soft, like English z, at the beginning of a word where a vowel follows; in Hungarian it is sounded as sh.

sc in Italian before e and i has the sound of sh. (See above under c.)

sch in German has the sound of sh; in Dutch is equivalent to sch, in Italian to sk.

sk before e, i, j, y, and the modifications of a and o, is sounded in Norwegian like sh.

st in Swedish when followed by a vowel has the sound of sh.

sz in Polish } are both sounded like sh.

sz in Bohemian }

sz in Hungarian is sounded like s.

th in Welsh is sounded like th in thin, in all other European languages using the Roman alphabet like the simple t.

ti in Swedish when followed by a vowel has the sound of ch in chain.

ts in Hungarian is sounded like ch in chain.

v in German and Dutch has a sound closely resembling that of v produced by bringing the lips feebly into contact, not by placing the upper teeth against the lower lip. In Welsh it has the sound of u or o.

x in Portuguese has the sound of sh; in old Spanish spelling it is used where j is now used to represent the sound of ch.

y may be either a vowel or a consonant, and the latter sound is heard in Hungarian after d, g, l, n, and t.

z in German and Swedish has the sound of ts; in Italian sometimes that of dz, sometimes that of ts; in Spanish that of th in thin. In Spanish America it has usually the sound of s in sing.

zs in Bohemian } have the sound of zh.

zs in Hungarian }

The above rules have reference to languages, such as most of those of Europe, that use the Roman alphabet (with certain modifications). In regard to languages that do not use this alphabet, the general rule is to spell geographical names in English phonetically in accordance with the prevailing sounds of the letters of the English alphabet. In such phonetic spellings, however, the vowels usually receive their continental sounds (as in far, rein, pique, rule). In Indian and some other Asiatic names and in Arabic names a is often used also to represent the sound of the English u in but. The vowel digraph ai usually represents the sound of y in fly, but sometimes that of a in fat; ei, most commonly that of a in fat, but sometimes that of y in fly; ou for the most part sounds as ow in now, but in some cases as a in fall. In the spelling of Indian names this last digraph was often used where á is most now used, the sound intended being that of a in far, or perhaps one somewhat broader. The consonants j, w, y, z have as a rule their characteristic English sounds, as in jet, yet, well, zeal; g usually has its hard sound as in get. Ch usually represents the sound which it has in chain; gh sometimes that of a very rough aspirate, sometimes a sound like that of the Northumberland or Berwickshire burr, sometimes, before e or i, merely the hard sound of g; kh is the combination most frequently used to represent the sound of ch; and th usually stands for the sound which it has in thin, sometimes for that which it has in then.

In Indian, Arabic, and some other names aspirated consonants occur, and are represented in spelling by an h following the consonant, as in Bhotan. The proper sound of this combination is accurately represented by the letter h composing it, but in the English pronunciation of such names this peculiarity is commonly disregarded.

In the spelling of geographical names belonging to languages which do not use the Roman alphabet numerous variations are found from different causes. Very often the variation is due to the irregularity in the use of our own alphabet, which leads one person to represent the same sound phonetically in one way, another in another, as in Moorook, Muruk, &c. Sometimes the variation is due to the obscurity of the sounds themselves, as where a vowel sound is so short that its exact quality can hardly be determined, as in Bedouin, Bedagin. In other cases the variation is due to the adoption in English of a continental mode of spelling, as where dj is adopted from the French for j, as in Djebel for Jabel, or tch from the same language for ch, as in Kamchatka (the common spelling) for Kamchatka, or j from the practice of most continental nations using it for y, as in Jakutsk for Yakutsk. Other variations are due to the fact that the sounds to be represented have no signs for them in the Roman alphabet or any of its commonly used digraphs, so that different signs are adopted to represent them approximately in accordance with the conceptions of different persons. In other cases, again, the variation is accounted for by differences of dialect, or different pronunciations of the same dialect in different parts of the country or region in which a particular language is spoken.

Such variations should be kept in mind by those who consult this list, since names not found under one spelling may be found under some other equivalent spelling. Thus names not found spelled with c, ch, z, y, &c., may be found under the spellings k, kh, s, j, &c. respectively; Spanish names in x may be found spelled with j, Dutch names in y may be found in ij, and so forth.

ACCENT

As to the position of the accent no general rules can be given. Many languages exhibit no such marked accentual stress as is heard in English. This is the case with French indeed, though French words are commonly regarded as having an accent on the last. The accentuation of German, Dutch, and the other Teutonic tongues, in its main features coincides with that of English, the root syllable having the accent. Italian words ending in a vowel usually accent the syllable next the last; the same is the case with Spanish and Portuguese. Spanish words ending in a consonant almost always accent the last, if there is any peculiarity in accentuation the accented syllable is usually printed with an acute.

— in the case of the Most Rev. The Most Reverend. Begin: 'Right Rev. Sir.' In Scotland the usage is the same — 'The Right Rev. the Bishop of —' or 'The Right Rev. A. B., Bishop of —' or 'The Right Rev. Bishop —' (with surname). Begin: 'Right Rev. Sir.' The Primas of the Scottish Episcopal Church is addressed as 'The Most Rev.' Begin: 'Most Rev. Sir.' Neither Irish nor Scottish bishops can claim to be spoken of as 'Lord Bishop,' 'Your Lordship,' though this is sometimes done.

Canon. Address: 'The Rev. Canon —'. Begin: 'Reverend Sir.'

Cardinal. The special title of a cardinal is such as 'His Eminence.' Begin: 'Your Eminence.'

Charge d'Affaires. See Ambassador.

Clergy. The general form of address is 'The Reverend A. B.' Begin: 'The Sir or simply 'Sir.' If a clergyman is the son of a duke or marquise he is to be addressed as the Rev. Lord or Lady, if the son of an earl, viscount, or baron: 'The Rev. the Honourable A. B.' or 'The Hon. and Rev. A. B.' If he is a baronet, 'The Rev. A. B., Esq.' —

Congress. Members of a Congress are generally 'The Honourable A. B.' —

Consul. There is no special form of address to a person as such. A. B., Esq., H. B. M. Consul, 'Consul-general,' or as the case may be. In the U. States, however, a consul is commonly called 'Honourable' —

Councils. Address: 'The Right Honourable the Council of —'. Begin: 'Madam,' 'Sir' or 'A. Your Lordship.' —

Dean. Address: 'The Very Reverend the Dean.' Begin: 'Very Rev. Sir.' —

Deans. Deans are usually 'Dean' used in oral communication, and 'Dean' in the written form.

Doctors. See Professors.

Dukes. See Dukes.

Duchesses. When the holder of a title marries the widow of a previous holder of the same title becomes 'dowager,' this being mentioned in addressing her: 'The Dowager Lady —' or 'The Dowager Duchess —'. Instead of 'Dowager,' to which some ladies object, the Christian name may be used: 'The Right Hon. Mary Countess of —'. Begin: 'Madam,' refer to as 'Your Ladyship.' —

Duchess. Address: 'Her Grace the Duchess of —'. Begin: 'Madam,' refer to as 'Your Grace.' —

Duke. Address: 'His Grace the Duke of —'. Begin: 'My Lord Duke,' refer to as 'Your Grace.' An heir of a duke is entitled to be called 'Right Honourable.' Royal dukes are different. See Prince.

Duke's daughter. Address: 'The Right Hon. —', with Christian name and surname, or 'The Lady —', with Christian name and surname. Begin: 'Madam,' refer to as 'Your Ladyship.' If married to a commoner or a peer by courtesy, the surname is derived from the husband's name or title; if to a peer the wife takes a title corresponding to her husband's.

Duke's son. A duke's eldest son takes by courtesy one of his father's secondary titles, and is thus usually a marquise or an earl, being addressed exactly as if really a peer with the respective rank. His wife receives the corresponding title, but is thus a marchioness or countess, and their eldest son takes also a courtesy title belonging to the family, being thus either a viscount or a baron.

Duke's younger sons are addressed similarly to his sisters: 'The Right Honourable Lord A. B.' or 'The Lord A. B.' —

Begin: 'My Lord,' refer to as 'Your Lordship.' Their wives are treated in a corresponding manner: 'The Right Honourable Lady A. B.' or 'The Lady A. B.' —

Begin: 'Your Ladyship.' —

Earl. Address: 'The Right Honourable the Earl of —' or 'The Earl of —'. Begin: 'My Lord,' refer to as 'Your Lordship.' —

The wife of an earl is a countess. (See above.)

Earl's children. The eldest son of an earl (the eldest son of a duke) takes a courtesy title from his father and thus ranks either as a viscount or a baron, being treated as if really a peer with the respective rank. The younger sons of an earl are all called 'Honourable' (their eldest brother is 'Right Honourable') —

'The Hon. A. B.' — the same as the sons of a baron. (See above.)

The daughter of an earl is all 'Right Honourable,' and are addressed as the daughters of a duke. (See above.)

Envoy. See Ambassador.

Executive Council. Members of (in colonial governments). Generally addressed as 'The Honourable A. B.' —

Governor of Colony. Colonial governors have the title of 'Excellency' in virtue of their office. Address: 'His Excellency A. B., Esq. (Sir A. B., The Right Honourable A. B., Governor of —'. Begin according to rank: refer to as 'Your Excellency.' A duke holding such a position would, however, be 'His Grace,' 'Your Grace.' A governor's wife does not have any claim to be called 'Her Excellency.' In India, governors, as in India and the Dominion of Canada, are styled 'Honourable,' 'His Honour,' 'Your Honour.' —

Governor of State (U.S.). Usually addressed as 'His Excellency.' 'His Excellency A. B., Governor of —' or 'His Excellency the Governor of —'. A lieutenant-governor is called 'Honourable.' —

Judge. This in Britain has not a very distinct meaning. In England and Ireland the judges of the supreme courts are called 'Lords Justices and Justices; in Scotland the judges are the Lords of Session (see Justice, Lord Justice, Lords of Session). In England the county court judges, however, are regularly called 'Judge.' 'His Honour Judge —' (formally on the bench referred to as 'Your Honour.' —

In many British colonies the members of the higher courts are called judges and are addressed as 'The Honourable A. B.' —

In the U. States the term judge is regularly applied to all such functionaries, and all are addressed in the same way.

Justice. Judges of the High Court of Justice in England, in the Chancery and other divisions, are called justices. Address: 'The Honourable Mr. Justice —' or if a knight, 'The Hon. Sir A. B., Esq.' —

Begin: 'Sir.' On the bench he is addressed as 'My Lord,' and referred to as 'Your Lordship.' —

Justice of Peace. In England is formally addressed in documents as 'The Worshipful,' and on the bench is referred to as 'Your Worship.' —

Kings. To be addressed as 'The King's Most Excellent Majesty.' Begin: 'Sir,' or 'May it please Your Majesty,' refer to as 'Your Majesty.' —

Knight Bachelor. Treated as a baronet, name is addressed, a letter, as in the case of a baronet, and is addressed using a surname instead of a Christian name.

Knight of the Bath, St. Michael and St. George, Star of India. Address: 'Sir A. B., G.C.B.' or 'K.C.B., K.M.G., K.S.I., as the case may be. Begin: 'Sir.' —

Knight of the Garter, Thistle, St. Patrick. As above, with the initials R.G., K.T., K.S. respectively following the name.
